Introduction:

Herbaria have long been recognized as valuable resources for botanical research, conservation, and education. These collections of dried and pressed plant specimens provide an invaluable record of plant biodiversity and have been used for various purposes, including taxonomic studies, ecological research, and drug discovery. However, the vast majority of these collections are housed in physical form, making them difficult to access and utilize for researchers and the general public.

The digitization of herbarium specimens has emerged as an innovative solution to this problem. By capturing high-quality digital images of herbarium specimens and creating a searchable database, researchers can easily access and study these specimens from anywhere in the world. Additionally, digitization efforts can help to preserve these valuable collections and prevent loss or damage due to physical degradation or disasters.

The Economic Herbaria at Industrial Section, Indian Museum with acronym BSIS, houses a significant collection of plant specimens with economic importance. The specimens in this collection are particularly relevant to industrial and economic applications, including pharmaceuticals, food, and agriculture. The collection is further divided into separate sections for dicot and monocot specimens, as well as a huge collection of algal specimens, specifically collected by Dr. K.S. Srinivasan during the period of 1944 to 1955. Few collections were made by an anonymous collector during the period of 1914 to 1917 as part of study of economic plants of British India.

However, the collection is currently only accessible in physical form, limiting its use and potential impact. In this report, we present the results of our efforts to digitize the herbarium specimens present in the Economic Herbaria at Industrial Section, Indian Museum with acronym BSIS. We describe our methods for capturing high-quality digital images of the specimens, creating a searchable database, and making the digitized specimens accessible to researchers and the general public. Our study aims to provide a valuable resource for botanical research and education, as well as contribute to the preservation of this important collection for future generations.

Methodology:

The digitization of the herbarium specimens present in the Economic Herbaria at Industrial Section, Indian Museum was conducted using an Epson Expression 12000XL scanner. For each herbarium sheet, we captured two images using different settings to ensure high-quality digitization of the specimens.

The first setting used was 24-bit colour mode, 300 dpi resolution, and jpeg image format. This setting was chosen as it provides a balance between image quality and file size, making it suitable for online access and storage. The second setting used was 48-bit colour mode, 600 dpi resolution, and tiff image format. This setting was chosen to capture the maximum amount of detail and information possible, making it suitable for scientific research and analysis.

Before scanning, each herbarium sheet was inspected for any damage or deformities that may affect the quality of the digital image. Any sheets with significant damage were excluded from the digitization process to ensure the quality of the digital image is not compromised. In addition, a standard scale and colour codes were added to each herbarium sheet during scanning to aid in the accurate measurement and analysis of the specimens.

To ensure accuracy and consistency in the digitization process, we created a standard protocol for scanning each herbarium sheet. The protocol includes guidelines for the placement of the sheet on the scanner bed, the orientation of the sheet, and the adjustments of the scanner settings. This protocol was followed for each sheet, ensuring uniformity in the digitization process.

After scanning, the digital images were organized in folders and will be uploaded in Botanical Survey of India's Digital Herbaria database using appropriate software. The database includes information about the specimen, including its barcode number, scientific name (generic and specific epithet where mentioned), family name, collected by, place of collection, collection date, and field number. The digitized specimens will be made available online for researchers and the general public to access and study.

Results:

A total of 4,212 herbarium specimens of algae were successfully digitized using the scanner. Each specimen was captured in two settings, resulting in a total of 8,424 digital images. The metadata for each specimen was recorded in a table along with barcode number, scientific name (generic and specific epithet where mentioned), family name, collected by, place of collection, collection date, and field number (attached in Annexure 1).

The metadata recorded for each specimen provides valuable information for researchers studying algae, including their taxonomic classification, geographic distribution, and collection history. The barcodes also provide a unique identifier for each specimen, making it easy to locate and retrieve specific specimens from the collection.

Conclusion:

In summary, our digitization process utilized an Epson Expression 12000XL scanner to capture high-quality digital images of herbarium specimens present in the Economic Herbaria at Industrial Section, Indian Museum (BSIS). The use of two different settings allowed us to balance image quality and file size while also capturing maximum detail and information. A standard protocol was developed and followed for each sheet to ensure accuracy and consistency in the digitization process, and a standard scale and colour codes were added to aid in accurate measurement and analysis of the specimens.
